

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A wireless LAN system comprising a plurality of wireless stations, and a switching apparatus for switching a frequency channel used between stations communicated with each other. The switching apparatus includes means for selecting the frequency channel to be used, and means for sending a switching request packet for specifying the selected frequency channel to the stations. Each of the stations include means for switching a current frequency channel to the frequency channel specified by the switching request packet received.